BANISHING NITRO-GLYCERINE.—The peculiar dangers of using nitro-glycerine, as of gun cotton and all the other nitrate compounds except gunpowder, are unavoidable because the sources from which they arise are totally unknown. The characteristics of gunpowder are perfectly understood. It is a compound stable and trustworthy enough, never exploding except under conditions which everybody knows.
But nitro-glycerine—to speak in the present connection solely of that article—has tricks wholly beyond the comprehension of the ablest chemists. Though under some circumstances it is less liable to decomposition than gunpowder, under others, which cannot be foreseen and prevented against, "it goes off of itself." In a word it is an "unstable compound." In the language of chemistry resembling in that respect, the powders made from chlorate or peroxide of potash, chloride of nitrogen and other products, in which the nitrogen is not held in a grasp sufficiently firm by the other agents with which it is united. Some of the dreadfully disastrous nitro-glycerine explosions that have occurred may be directly traceable to the carelessness of employees, but the most of them are undoubtedly have resulted from causes inherent in the composition of the substance. It is a great mistake to think that this should be the case; for, if nitro-glycerine could be depended on with the same sense of security as gunpowder, it would entirely supersede the latter in every blasting business on land and under water, being far the superior of gunpowder in cheapness and efficiency. Since these mysterious perils accompany the use of nitro-glycerine we have no hesitation in suggesting that its manufacture and employment should be forbidden by legislation. It kills the blood to read, as we so frequently have to, of men blown to atoms, rows of houses shattered to the ground, and devastation spread far and wide by the explosion of factories or cans of this terrible agent of death. The loss to the world by its banishment will be but slight after all—compared to the damages resulting from its use—for in gunpowder we shall still possess a powerful enough agent to remove mountains and do all the gigantic work required by the engineering genius of the age.

English Colonial Policy.
IMPORTANT DEBATE IN THE LORDS—THE LATEST HINT TO CANADA.

In the House of Lords, on June 30th, Lord Russell called attention to the change of Colonial policy on the part of the Administration, and expressed regret at the withdrawal of British troops from Canada and New Zealand. He contrasted the state of the Colonies when the present Government came into office with the feeling provoked by the coldness and repugnance they had exhibited when the Colonies asked for any assistance. The Colonies were proud of their connection with the Mother Country, and it would be a great evil and a crime to weaken their attachment. He moved that a Commission be appointed to inquire into the means best fitted to guarantee the security of the Queen's dominions. Thereupon ensued a debate in which Lord Northbrook pointed out "the necessity of a greater concentration of troops at home for the security of the Empire," and Lord Gray declared that "the principles laid down by successive Colonial Secretaries must necessarily lead to the dissolution of our Colonial Empire."

Lord Granville, Colonial Minister, in explanation of the policy of the Government, said: The Colonies must depend on the power and influence of the mother country. I am convinced that what foreign nations regard in us is not our real, but our latent power, and that they are not discouraged by the presence of a few troops, but by the feeling that they are actually conferring a great advantage on the Colonists; for you teach them to look to themselves, and you put on them a gentle pressure to create an army, which would be of great assistance in case of a war with some other country—an event which I hope will never happen. We have offered to let the Colony have a whole regiment to form a nucleus for their own army in raising which I believe they will be very successful, and we are quite ready to let them have some of our best officers who however, will not lose their position in the English army, although during the time they serve in Canada they will be entirely distinct from it, and will be the officers and servants of the Government of the country. We must not forget that while the United States has become, for she has 4,500,000 inhabitants, a merchant marine equal to three-fourths of that of France; there are 70,000 seamen on her lakes; and by the great exertions which her people are making, they are proving that they feel the responsibility that lies upon them, and they will meet it gallantly and well. So far from making it more likely that the United States will invade that Colony, I believe that the fact of our taking away a handful of British troops will remove any temptation to invasion that there might be at the time of great national irritation.

The debate elicited comments from all the London papers, some of them being of a very positive character. The Times, commenting on Lord Russell's views as follows: "The Times," says the London Standard, "is a Canadian official is said to be on a mission to England to ask the intervention of the Home Government in the matter of the Fenian raid into Canada, and if possible to get up a quarrel with the United States. He is coming on a fool's errand. How should we like to have our own troops converging upon London from every point of the compass? We should not feel prouder of the Canadians, and they would not feel prouder of themselves, if they came crying to the Mother Country whenever danger or trouble threatened, instead of defending themselves of their own accord. The Great Baffin policy is completely out of date."

The Post says:
The troops have been left too long in such dependencies already. The transitional condition of affairs is the only excuse for the delay that has occurred. The Colonies have, as it were, been setting up house for themselves, and pending the completion of their arrangements they have been permitted to avail themselves temporarily of the parental resources. But clearly the time would have to arrive when the internal and domestic affairs of each, practically independent of each other, must be conducted without further assistance from without. With many of our Colonies that time has now arrived.

THE FOREST AFTER THE FIRE.—Not long ago the forest around Thunder Bay, Lake Superior, was destroyed by fire for a great distance. A letter to the Toronto Globe, from its correspondent with the Red River expedition, gives a description of the burnt district as it now appears.

The change of appearance on either side of the road was so marked that, with the exception of about four miles, I failed to recognize the country through which I passed. The great fire, mentioned in a former letter—had swept the country round about almost clear of green growth. The forests of pine that lined the road for mile after mile stretching away as far as the eye could see, were gone; but among the charred logs, and round the sapless trunks a new growth had sprung up, and advancing summer had opened buds, unfolded leaves and covered the dark, dismal tracts of dead wood with waving, many colored leaves. Burnt grass and withered twigs had been replaced by acres of blossoming strawberry plants, their clusters of white blossoms, and variegated leaves. In some places the fire had passed a tree, or a clump of trees without harming them, while burning and destroying everything around, and now these generally beech trees—were one mass of bright light green leaves interlaced with the silver boughs from which they grew.

It was very curious to note the breaks of the fire, and impossible to account for the way in which it crossed certain spots here and there, passing certain trees as if they had been marked, like the little of the Ishraelitish doors. Some times a tract of several acres would appear round which the fire had burnt in an area like that of a bearded bow, and there were clumps of trees in which one or perhaps two had totally escaped while others, black for thirty feet from the ground, were one mass of green leaves at the top. Here and there were places as dreary and desolate as if the sun had ceased to shine upon them, the charred stumps still covering the land, and rising in grotesque, fantastic forms like distorted specters, giving the place the appearance of a haunted land, where the only change was a pleasant change that it seemed as if the curse had been removed and a blessing sent in its stead.
